SPEAKER PROFILE

Princess Glory

Founder, BAME Lone Parents Network · also known as Glory Edward

Princess Glory (also known as Glory Edward) is the founder of BAME Lone Parents Network, a UK organisation supporting single-parent families, women, children and older adults. An educator, entrepreneur, author and Christian leader of Nigerian heritage, she speaks on single-parent empowerment, ageing without family support, digital inclusion and moving from compassion to transformation.

Where she has taken part: Single Parents Day (21 March), for three years.

Signature talks

From Compassion to Transformation
Why giving is only the beginning. How a fridge, a laptop or a food hamper can open the door to education, skills and lasting independence, drawn from BLPN's own journey since 2022.

The Forgotten Generation: Ageing Without Family Support
Older people without children, a spouse or close family nearby are a growing and often invisible group. What they need, and how communities, services and policy can respond with dignity.

Never Too Old to Innovate: AI After 60
What happened when more than 50 people aged over 60 learned to use artificial intelligence, and what it teaches us about digital inclusion across generations.

Single Parenthood Is Not the End of the Story
Single parents, and single mothers above all, can build income, skills and businesses when the right support is in place. Practical lessons from sewing machines to salon start-ups.

Talent Is Everywhere, Opportunity Is Not
From scholarship applications to university: how families on low incomes can open doors in education, and what schools and funders can do to help.

Faith, Purpose and Community Leadership
How faith can move people from compassion to practical action, and how faith communities can serve their neighbours with dignity and accountability.
